

Thursday, December 27, 2007

Google Ads

Some of you may have noticed the Google ads that I put to the left of the blog. Google AdSense accounts are one of the ways people who don't do anything with their websites (me) make money. When I say make money, I mean I carve out a couple bucks a week. While this doesn't seem like much, it's only like that for me because I have about four people that read this. And, I sincerely thank you four for being here. In fact, I salute you. salutes | pokes eye out on accident | Cusses ANYway, Google ads adjust the type of ads that are displayed based on the content of the page you are looking at. Because I haven't blogged that much all the ads are talking about how to relieve stress. Nutty. I'll try and talk about more interesting things. Not that you care what the ads look like, but it kind of makes me look crazy. And the voices in my head say that could be a "bad thing". Hmm....

Posted by Rory Brown at 16:58